President’s Letter

As my year as PAPOR president comes to a close, I’d like to ruminate on a recent New Yorker article that gave me pause. Author Jill Lepore lays out a sort of doomsday scenario about polling, questioning whether current sampling methods are really representative, whether election forecasting is important, and whether polling is even good for democracy. It is a deeply researched and nuanced article and should make us all think twice about the assumptions we take for granted.

However, I did not find an answer in Lepore’s article to the fundamental question about whether measuring public opinion is important. She asks this question in several ways, but ends up pointing to methodological and historical polling flaws and declining trust in polls as justification for why it might be bad for democracy. She seemingly guides the reader to her answer by laying out a scenario for the co-founder of CrowdPac, Steve Hilton, in which a perfect measure of public opinion could be provided to a lawmaker before a key policy decision is made. She then quotes the reaction of Hilton: “A worried look crossed Hilton’s face… Hilton shook his head. ‘You can’t solve every problem with more democracy,’ he said.”

What I found troubling about her bottom line—that traditional methods are flawed, that mixed mode methods are flawed, that data science doesn’t have all the answers, that researchers are not transparent about their methods, and that therefore measuring public opinion may be bad for democracy and may not be important anyway—is her failure to see public opinion research through a wider lens, beyond its execution failures.

For instance, is public opinion research really only about elections? Voting is one way for the people to express their will, but what are the other avenues for expression?

According to a Dec. 7 Pew Research Center survey, 76 percent of Americans (including 76 of both Democrats and Republicans) say that money has a greater influence on politics than ever before. Among the many arguments in favor of polling its role as a countervailing force against special interests...
President’s Letter

is, in my opinion, one of the most important.

This goes beyond election predictions and candidate races and speaks to the heart of our democracy. “Providing a voice for the people” is not a cute or passé phrase. In fact, in an era of extreme political polarization and super PACs, it strikes me as a more important objective than ever. It means that leaders in our industry must find solutions to today’s polling challenges. When I pick up my copies of Public Opinion Quarterly (POQ), follow the threads on AAPOR-net, meet up for lively discussions with my PAPOR colleagues, read about the latest methodological research being conducted by Pew (and on and on), my faith is renewed.

Thank you for letting me serve as PAPOR president. It has been an honor!

Message from Conference Chair

- Scholars in our five well-rounded paper panels and poster session present some very timely research on analysis and design methods, uses and ethics of survey data collection, improvements to survey modes, mobile survey response and design, and recent trends in American politics.

- Our plenary on using big data in public opinion and polling research features three speakers with the expertise and hands-on experience to engage in an exciting discussion about what big data is, how we can use it, pitfalls and issues, and an outlook on the future.

- Instructors of our short courses have a depth of knowledge and experience about two recent developments that are quickly becoming standards in the field: dual-frame cell phone and landline survey design, and mobile devices and modular survey design.

- Our reception and tasty dinner before our plenary on Thursday, Italian-themed lunch on Friday, and breaks with coffee and snacks throughout the conference provide many opportunities to meet, mingle, and muse with fellow PAPOR members, colleagues, clients, and friends.

I hope you enjoy the conference location, the Marines’ Memorial Club & Hotel which was created as a living memorial to service members. While here, I encourage you to visit the General E.O. Ames Library and Museum, located on the 11th floor near our event, but please note that it is a quiet area. Also, if you have the time, try to enjoy all that San Francisco has to offer. Visit our conference registration table to pick up a copy of the San Francisco Visitor’s Planning Guide 2015 for more information, or just to say hello.

Thank you for your attendance and support,
Benjamin L. Messer

PAPOR Annual Student Paper Competition

PAPOR is pleased to sponsor the annual Student Paper Competition to encourage undergraduates and graduate students participation.

Congratulations to the winners of the 2015 PAPOR Student Paper Competition!

First place winner
Alejandra Gimenez/Joshua Cooper, both undergraduates at Brigham Young University studying Political Science.
Conflicting Thoughts: The Effect of Information on Support for an Increase in the Federal Minimum Wage Level

The 1st place paper is awarded a cash prize of $250, a conference registration, up to $250 for travel expenses to attend the conference, a honorary one-year membership to PAPOR and a spot at the PAPOR conference to present research.

Runner-up
Justine Gardner, a PhD candidate from University of Nevada, Las Vegas in the School of Environmental and Public Affairs.

The runner up receives a honorary one-year membership to PAPOR and a spot on the PAPOR conference program.

Jessica Gollaher, PAPOR Student Paper Competition Chair, and two volunteers (Paul Johnson and Bianca DiJulio) judged the 2015 paper submissions.

CONFERENCE VENUE

For the third consecutive year, the PAPOR Annual Conference will be held at the Marines’ Memorial Club & Hotel, just one block off Union Square at 609 Sutter Street, in the heart of downtown San Francisco. The two-day conference, short courses and AGM will be held December 10-11 on the 11th floor of the hotel.

The Beaux Art-style building enjoys San Francisco’s protected landmark status. The Marines Memorial Club was recognized on June 25, 2015 by the California Heritage Council for its uniqueness as a Living Memorial and for efforts to preserve the character and charm of old San Francisco.

PAPOR would like to thank the NorthWest Chapter of the Marketing Research Association (MRA) for extending an invitation to PAPOR members to attend the Bay Area holiday party in the hotel’s Leatherneck Restaurant & Lounge on December 9th. We look forward to meeting some of the NorthWest and Southern California (SoCal) MRA members at our PAPOR conference.
Thank You!
